The Class History

In the year 1939, a typical group of bewildered freshmen embarked on the "S. S. Fairhaven" on the first lap of a four year voyage. Although the majority of us had had a taste of life on shipboard the previous year, and considered ourselves "old hands," nevertheless, it was soon evident that to the upperclassmen we were rather insignificant. This was our first lesson — which was to be taught to us many, many times in the years to come — how small a part we play in the life that is so much bigger than we ourselves.

The officers of the "S. S. Fairhaven" on the first year of its voyage were as follows: Captain, Matthew Goulet, a very popular individual who had served in this capacity the previous year during eighth grade days; First Mate, Lawrence Bennett; Keeper of The Log, Marion Booth; Purser, Dorothy Baron. Miss Cecile Giguere, of the faculty, acted as our Executive Officer, and we would have been lost without her help.

The initial entertainment staged aboard ship was a magician's show, with Howard Smith, magical wizard, to a very appreciative audience. The next social event was the Freshman Frolic, a novel dance with decorations in a black and white motif of musical notes. The proceeds from both of these started the class fund which, we were informed, must be planned well in advance for our final year aboard.

As the ship began the second year of its voyage, its officers were changed. David Cargill now captained the good "S. S. Fairhaven" with Patricia Hagen, Kathleen Fisher, and Donald Chase serving as the other officers. This year Miss Katharine Chaffee was at the helm to remain there for the next two years.

The first event on the ship's calendar for the fall of '40 was a harum scarum Spook Dance, at which the officers and crew turned out as farmers and farmerettes. For a while we went back to playing party games that delight twelve-year-olds, and had the time of our lives doing so. The hold of the ship was decorated as befitted the harvest season, and the piles of actual corn stalks grouped about its interior made a picturesque setting.

In February, to commemorate Washington's Birthday, we declared a holiday aboard, and held a most successful dance. With but a slight stretch of the imagination we were in Washington, D. C., strolling through the rows upon rows of its celebrated, blossoming cherry trees. Our girls had attached artificial blooms to tree branches, and the effect was very realistic. Thus to an end came the second year's voyage on the good ship, which holds so many pleasant memories for us all, I am sure.

With few changes in the personnel of the ship's officers — those of First Mate, Antonio Finocchi, and Purser, Patricia Hagen, — we started on the third lap of our voyage. The October impress on the ship's social calendar was an informal Get-Together Party for officers and crew. During this same month and also in November, shore leaves were given to attend a series of football games, at which members of the crew acted as candy vendor in order to swell the Purser's Fund.

A Frolic on board ushered in the new year, affording an enjoyable evening's entertainment. Four months later, in May, the long anticipated Junior Prom, King Neptune's Ball, voted Kathleen Fisher its queen. She was unattended. For the occasion, the hold of the ship became a veritable ocean itself with rare, tropical fish, sea flora, beautiful shells, sailor's chests brought in by the tide, and even King Neptune himself riding the waves. The only other dance of the semester was a Junior Day affair given in collaboration with the seniors. The class of '43 joined with the seniors, this year, in presenting to the school as a class gift an electric score-board.

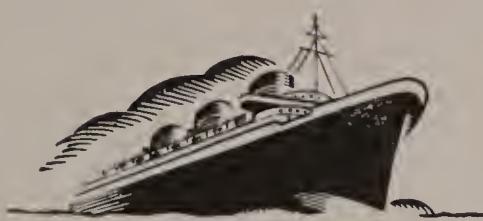

The "S. S. Fairhaven" on its final spurt was captained by David Cargill, with Patricia Hagen, First-Mate; Kathleen Fisher, Keeper of the Log; and Alexander Clement, Purser. The initial effort of officers and crew was The Huttlestonian — this time truly a yearbook. A harvest dance in November, under the sponsorship of Miss Edith Rogers, welcomed the latter as our newest Executive Officer. Try-outs for the Senior Play were in order immediately after Christmas furloughs, and the following cast was eventually chosen: Lois Swift, Alexander Clement, Ruth Byerly, John Atkinson, Barbara Taylor, Ada Poole, Cecilia Le Claire, Thelma Tinkham, Richard Lauzon and Curtis Lopes. The customary dance was held after the presentation.

At the opening of the second semester, in February, in the midst of cold winds and snowstorms, a Spring Dance was scheduled in a background of blooms and robbins.

The last social event of the year, the class dinner and prom, so long anticipated, brought the consciousness of broken ranks — places left vacant by members of the crew who had entered the services of their country.

It is with a sense of regret, as I write this last item, that I close the log. The good "S. S. Fairhaven" has come into port; the officers and the remaining members of the crew have departed for prolonged furloughs before embarking on their final voyage — life.

The Class Will

We, the class of 1943 of the Fairhaven High School, county of Bristol, and state of Massachusetts, being of legal age, sound mind and memory, do make, publish, and declare this, our last will and testament, hereby revoking and making void any other promise heretofore made, as a thoughtless wish of an idle hour.

Item 1—We, the seniors, leave our high rating in the school to the quiet, little sophomores with the hope that they will remain in good standing with the teachers — as we have.

Item 2—Pete Lauzon leaves the task of looking after Hilda while he is in the service to Ernest Lemieux. Appoint someone to look after Ernest, Pete!

Item 3—Evelyn Afthemeades wills her dancing talent to Natalie Rebello, provided that Natalie does not pound a hole through the floor of the Bohemian gardens.

Item 4—David Dunwoodie bequeathes his lonely seat wherever he goes to any bashful junior.

Item 5—John Atkinson turns over his unused coffee stamps to Coach Clement, who has been drinking tea for so long that he is beginning to look like a tea-bag.

Item 6—Ada Poole regretfully leaves her long hair to Dave Wilson.

Item 7—Mr. Wood shall inherit Ruth Byerly's 200 fingernail polish-bottles that he took away from her once. Perhaps Mrs. Wood can mix them, if she is clever, and get some new off-shades.

Item 8—Arthur Frates leaves his fame as a buck jumper to some of the freshmen, who have a hard time jumping high enough to get over the hurdles.

Item 9—Hippo bequeaths his position of guard on the football team to John Gage.

Item 10—The seniors are willing Mr. Entin a set of post holes for a fence he has been working on. We are also going to send Gus Perry along as a helper.

Item 11—Donald Allen wills his sweet ways with Jean Metzger to any polished wolf like Warren Pierce.

Item 12—Beverly Morey bequeaths her ability to do Latin II to any bright person who is taking Latin I in Mattapoisett. It is not much of an inheritance!

Item 13—Priscilla Furtado leaves her ability in athletics to Muriel Roberts.

Item 14—This senior class has given Miss Siebert many headaches. We are leaving her, therefore, a dosage of pills — the juniors.

Item 15—Raymond Martel leaves the metal type he has spoiled in the printing room to Gordon Baker, who may wish to use it sometime when he prints a newspaper.

Item 16—Cecilia LeClaire leaves Walter Sawyer the gun she used in the senior play. Walter is likely to do most anything with it.

Item 17—Pauline Duval leaves her beauty secrets to Carol Merchant, who has the desire to become an actress some day. Who knows, she may act as stand-in for Joan Davis, Veronica Lake or even Clarabelle Cow. I am not sure which, because she resembles them all!

Item 18—Since Harry is in the service, Barbara must leave their love seat to someone. She has decided to bequeath it to Marge Hayward. We wonder who her chum will be by next September!

Item 19—Larry Jean wills all of his baby pictures to the girls in the junior class to distribute among themselves. However, Larry did not have the curls that he has now.

Item 20—Hilda Botelho has become very patriotic, and has decided to turn over all the paper she used in filling out after-sessions, this year, to the government. The government will certainly make a big haul!

Item 21—The class leaves Miss Rogers a gallon jug of Father John's medicine to stop her frequent coughs, and a loud speaker to help in warding off any sore throats due to shouting.

Item 22—James Miller wills his red hair to Fred Hubbard. If Fred gets Jim's freckles, too, his appearance will certainly be changed.

Item 23—The senior class leaves to Miss Kenny any money that is left after expenses are paid. It may be used in payment of dues not settled by juniors who hold class offices.

Item 24—Kay Fisher wills her fine personality to any juniors who are willing to advance a few years to meet Kay's standards.

In witness hereof, I have hereunto set my hand to this, the will and testament of the senior class of '43, this day, the 31st of March, 1943, A. D.

The Main Auditorium

The Class Prophecy

After ten years away from the scenes of my childhood, I decided to board the first cross-country plane on which I could get reservation, and return to my home for a brief visit.

As I settled down with two or three magazines, imagine my surprise to see Mary Candage coming toward me to chat for a few minutes. Jean Reynolds and Dorothy Disbury soon joined us, relating that all three had been Air-line hostesses for the past three years.

Our conversation was interrupted by the cries of four small children, as they came down the aisle with their mother, Priscilla Furtado, and took nearby seats. We began to reminisce and Priscilla told us she was on her way to join her husband in Chicago.

I awoke next morning refreshed by my night's sleep, just as we were landing in the East Fairhaven Airport owned by Arnold Terra and Richard Bota. Stepping down from the plane, I hailed a taxi driven by Arthur Frates. Racing into Fairhaven at the slow rate of 55 miles per hour, we were stopped by policeman "Hippo" Avilla, and advised to slow down!

After much confusion, which could only be made by "Hippo", we continued to the new Fairhaven Hotel, owned and operated by Raymond Martel and John Romine. The head doorman, Robert Matheson, ordered bellhop, Harold Cifford, to take my luggage. After getting settled in my room, I decided to tour my old hometown.

Walking down Green Street, I encountered John Atkinson dragging himself along after a hard day's work teaching English in the High School. He was worn out, he said, as I could readily see. I also learned that the faculty was now composed of Hilda Botelho, instructor in history, Marion Booth, instructor in shorthand, Jacqueline Key, the principal's secretary, Jean Paquette, instructor in typing, and Richard Lauzon, coach. Hugh Francis, boiler tender, assisted by Michael Hanczaryk had altercations but endeavored to keep the school heated. The cafeteria was managed by Thelma Tinkham assisted by Barbara Silver and Dorothy Gubellini.

After leaving the school, I boarded the bus for New Bedford. Philip Morgan, bus driver, amused the passengers frequently with outburst of songs which he had composed. As yet, he said, he had found no publishing house which would accept his compositions.

I stepped off the bus in front of the National Bank, now managed by Kathleen Fisher. Walking down Purchase Street, my attention was attracted to a billboard announcing the return engagement of the "Flora Dora" girls, namely Lorraine Dumont, Phyllis Lannan, Ruth Byerly and Cecilia LeClaire. My curiosity got the best of me, so I purchased a ticket from Hedwige Ferreira in the box office, and ventured backstage. To my surprise, there was Evelyn Afthemeades, alias Gloria Meade, also a member of the cast. The show, she informed me, was just small-town stuff, but they all had high hopes of making Hollywood in the near future if only talent scout, Laurent Jean, would witness their performance.

Inquiring further about some of my classmates, I learned that Pauline Duval and Patricia Cornell owned a fashionable dress shop just a few doors away, which specialized in selling gowns designed by Alberta Sylvia. On entering the shop, I saw Millicent Allen and Francis Biernacka working as seamstresses. We chatted for a few minutes, and then I departed to return to my hotel. As I was about to enter, I heard a voice say, "Could you spare a dime, Miss?"

I looked around to see a forlorn figure, molded into the form of Lawrence Bennett. Shocked at the sight, I asked him his trouble. He informed me that there was no trouble. He liked his work, and it helped him to keep his manly physique by not exerting himself. He liked being a play-boy.

Back in my room, I switched on the radio just as the four Whip-O-Wills, Eleanor Morrisette, Virginia Muldoon, Barbara Sylvia, and Eileen O'Neill came on the air assisted by pianist Ada Poole. As one song was all I could stand, I tuned in on comedians, Joe Alves and Francis Harrison, now considered the modern Abbot and Costello. Alec Clement, announcer for the new show was doing a very bad job of selling "Fluf-Soap" manufactured by Cargill and Chase Company.

The loud siren of the fire chief's car drowned my radio program, and rushing to the window, I saw the fire engines driven by Alan Dunham and David Dunwoodie race by. Later I heard this was but a false alarm rung by the local rowdies, Fred Gammans and Russell Thompson. Patrolmen Harold Rogers and Elliot Macomber soon found them a comfortable resting place for the night!

I picked up the evening edition of the paper, and there on the front page was an article announcing the arrival of the famous doctor, Richard Burrell, at St. Luke's Hospital. He had made a name for himself in the medical world and was now at the peak of his career. Already on the hospital staff were nurses Barbara Taylor, Edna Klubowicz, and Barbara Jason.

In the next column was an article written by Patricia Hagen reviewing the life story of Jean Metzger, world famous scientist, now making a tour of the European countries with her secretary-companion Cecelia Lewis. At that moment, chambermaids Bernice Fonfara and Carol Stacy came in. They had heard of my arrival and wanted to talk over old times.

As I was leaving the hotel the next morning, town clerk Richard Root came slowly through the door on his way to attend a meeting. He informed me that James Miller was applying for street cleaner's position, and that Theresa Regan was trying to purchase a piece of land to build a Stop and Shop grocery store. I learned, also, that Beverly Morey was making a name for herself in the musical world as a violinist, and was scheduled to make her debut at the Metropolitan in New York; that Audrey Lindsay had taken over the American Legion Hall and was giving dancing lessons to anyone who was interested; and that Phyllis Roberts was now drawing cartoons for The Standard Times.

Continuing on my way, I entered the "Greasy Spoon Luncheonette," owned by Curtis Lopes, who had in his employment as waitresses Angela Perry, Theresa Ribeiro, Rose Bernado, and Mildred Prucha. We exchanged a few words about the new beauty salon recently opened by Rose Rapoza and Eunice Rogers, and about the book by Ella Perry entitled How to Make Friends and Stay Happy. Curtis, also, had the news that Lois Swift, Sarah Pacheco, and Louise Green had found themselves rich husbands and were living abroad.

As I hailed a taxi to take me back to the airport, I mused on the varied occupations of my classmates. It was good to have seen old friends again, and I felt quite contented to return to my own position as head scrub woman in the Empire State Building.

"With malice toward none."

L'AVION

Calm as the night
He sailed the sea of stars,
And into the light
Of the wandering sun he flew,
Navigating well.
He was a quiet hero,
Enchanted by the spell
Of vast space and vacant halls
That border the palace
Of silence and beauty.
So, far from worldly malice
He flew his ship, but each day
He was drawn
Nearer the gate, which old night
And youthful dawn
Guard so well. And still on,
Until earth and man
Had vanished completely
Into the span
Called time, his ship,
The length and breadth
Of heaven flew to a silent palace
We call death.

Organizations and Activities

The Honor Society

The Fairhaven High School Honor Society is a chapter of the National Honor Society. At the initiation ceremony, held in March, new members are admitted from the Junior Class, and occasionally from the Senior Class, also. The Honor Society stresses the importance of scholarship, service, character, and leadership. Each year the impressive initiation ceremony is witnessed by representatives of the student body, and by parents and friends of the members.

The faculty advisors are Mr. Downing and Miss Wentzell. The officers of the society are president, David Cargill; vice president, Marion Booth; secretary, Kathleen Fisher; and treasurer, Alexander Clement. The members are Hilda Botelho, Mary Candage, Barbara Jason, Patricia Hagen, Jacqueline Key, Angela Perry, Frederick Gammans, Russell Thompson, Marjorie Terry, Dorothy Lacerda, Robert Mahoney, Adriana Vanderpol, Donald Drieson, Ann Lawton, Ruth Besse, Hester Barnes, Walter Sawyer, Betty Kobak, May Ann Thatcher, Kathleen Tucker, Mary Cardoza and Joan Spagnoli.

The Student Council

PATRICIA M. HAGEN
President

ALAN I. DUNHAM
Vice-President

ELLIOT H. MACOMBER
Secretary-Treasurer

The purpose of the Fairhaven High School Student Council is to act as a medium, through which representatives of the student body may voice their opinions on problems relative to their activities. This organization was formed by the late principal, the beloved George C. Dickey.

During the past year the Council has devoted much of its time to participation in war projects. A successful scrap drive and book campaign were sponsored; an honor roll dedicated to the servicemen from our school was completed; and through the combined efforts of the student body and the Student Council in encouraging the sale of War Stamps, we achieved the great honor of being able to fly the Minute Man Flag. Now we are working on a War Record Scrap Book.

Another project of great interest to the student body is the Fairhaven A, which is awarded at the end of each marking period to the class which has attained the record of highest merit. This banner has created great interest as well as better achievement.

The Cheerleaders

This year's squad of cheerleaders was composed of eight girls, who have popularized new cheers with the assistance of Miss Cushing, Instructor in Physical Education. They have maintained and augmented the school spirit, the squad cheers for all sports, and the cheering for the Fairhaven Varsity Team.

Pauline Duval and Ruth Byerly were the co-leaders. The squad was composed of Anne Lawton, Susan Wilbur, Marjorie Hayward, Shirley Cowen, Betty Wilde and Charlotte Wing. The co-leaders were dressed in all white, while the squad wore white sweaters and blue skirts.

Backstage at the Senior Play

On the eventful night of April 2, 1943, before an enthusiastic audience, the Senior Class presented its play entitled Happy Is The Bride. Because your reporter was backstage, the enormous task of making-up, the chills, the tension, the near hysteria, all can be described as terrific. "Knipe of New York," with a clever make-up pencil created new features for the work-a-day countenances of the performers amid much merriment and wise-cracking from an audience of stagehands. With the squeals of the property managers filling her ears, Miss Mabel Hoyle, the able director of the play, went about this task or that, instructing, scolding, encouraging or threatening as the case demanded, bearing out the truth of the prevailing story that in order to come near her, one must carry a white flag!

LOIS P. SWIFT

ALEXANDER M. CLEMENT
Leading Man

The first act progressed smoothly despite knocking knees and voices which threatened to expire, but consternation actually dripped backstage when, during the course of the first-act battle between John Atkinson and Ruth Byerly, John kicked Ruth with such force that a run sprang in her stocking and widened to an enormous hole. Her agonized whisper, "What am I going to do?" went to the very hearts of the stagehands. Like a real trouper, however, Ruthie carried on as if nothing had happened.

Backstage, there was much circumspect watching of Harold Rogers, the stage manager who, breaking his belt while moving furniture, went about with his nether garments trussed up by a piece of rope! Everyone anticipated catastrophe!

A lump as big as a hen's egg suddenly appeared for no good reason upon Curtis Lopes' head. He spent the greater part of the evening trying to decide what had hit him — and when!

Throughout the entire play, Miss Hoyle, policing her brood, forbade the eating of anything by the cast. The command was especially cruel since stagehands could munch to their heart's content on candy, swiped from the ushers. Incidentally, Lois Swift, the leading lady, had eaten pork chops and scalloped potatoes just before the performance, and no one was at all surprised when she announced that her stomach was not what it should be!

Amid hysterical laughter and unexplainable tears, the curtain fell, and satisfaction reigned supreme.

The Orchestra

The Fairhaven High School Orchestra has completed a rather unusual season for 1942 and 1943. Feeling the results of the depression in the string section, it was found necessary to combine the first and second orchestras into an eighty-eight piece group. In January of 1943 the orchestra was disbanded for two months, and a special ensemble of twenty advanced players was organized to accompany the operetta.

Reorganized in March, the orchestra included players from grades nine to twelve. Musicians of grade eight formed a second orchestra to meet on Thursday with Miss Hastings while Mr. Arey met the senior group each Wednesday.

Outstanding functions to which the senior orchestra has given its support include programs for Education Week, the Christmas Assembly, the Senior play, the annual May Festival and graduation. An ensemble from this orchestra assisted at the reception commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the opening of the Millicent Library.

The Band

The 1942-1943 calendar for the Fairhaven High School Band included a number of musical programs in school, attendance at football games during the season, and various other performances. The band was also featured at the Town Hall at the April Victory Garden meeting.

The organization participated in the May Festival for New England musical organizations, and, as usual, took part in the Memorial Day exercises in Fairhaven. Accompanied by Miss Hastings and Mr.

Arey, the combined Fairhaven and New Bedford Bands enjoyed their usual yearly outing in Boston, attending the "Pops" in the evening.

One event, which eclipsed all others in importance, was the drastic re-organization of the band in late March. At this time, new rules concerning attendance and membership were drawn up by a four-man band committee. The outstanding result of this shakeup was the decision to place entrance requirements on a competitive basis, and to differentiate between a concert and a marching band.

A Cappella Choir

The first public appearance of the A Cappella Choir this year was in November for the observance of Education Week, when the group sang the following songs: America The Beautiful, The Lord is My Shepherd, Onward Christian Soldiers, America, and Battle Hymn of the Republic.

After this program, the choir immediately started rehearsals for the operetta Shreds and Patches. Singing with the orchestra was a new, thrilling experience, for the choir has always sung without accompaniment up to this time. The rousing success of Shreds and Patches given in February showed to advantage the versatility of this group.

In the spring the choir prepared for baccalaureate service and for the senior high school graduation. Many of the former members of the organization, like those of the other departments in the school, are now in the armed forces, and several of our present members will join them in June.

Trivia

Every school brings forth a new crop of amusing incidents and a new group of students who unwittingly go to much trouble to do funny things and make hilarious remarks. This year, as in past years, we are pleased to present, for the amusement of all, a collection of the funniest happenings that have come to our attention during this year. It is with tongue in cheek, and a knowing grin on our wise faces, that we submit to you the latest and greatest among the trivia. So, here's hopin'.

John Atkinson and Carol Merchant, left alone in Coach Clement's office one sad day, found themselves in a quandary when they heard a telephone ring. Not that there is anything unusual about a telephone ringing, but this particular telephone could not be found, no matter where they hunted. Tracing the sound to its source, Carol mounted the Coach's desk and, perching atop it, discovered Mr. Bell's marvelous invention merrily ringing its way through two inches of dust in a heretofore quiet corner. With arms outstretched, Carol screamed to her cohort, "John, you simply have to find a way to answer that phone!"

This proved to be more easily said than done, and while they stood there with futility written all over their bewildered faces, Alec Clement came leaping down the stairs, calling, "Why don't you two answer that 'phone? It's an important out-of-town call!"

Ah, little did Alec realize the great mental effort and strain that had gone into the accomplishment of this simple little task!

Among the spectators at the 1943 Coyle-Fairhaven basketball game there were found Claire Santos and Eunice Rogers. These two senior girls had attended many such gatherings and thought themselves familiar with the procedure. During the game, they wondered, audibly, why the remainder of the audience kept their coats with them. They, themselves, felt quite superior — they had been wise enough to store their wraps in their lockers. (Ah, trusting souls!)

After the game, they ventured to obtain their coats from the locker room and were quite surprised to find this room locked. Entrance was impossible. Well, they didn't exactly relish the idea of Everybody enjoys playing on a winning team but it takes character and sportsmanship to stick it out on a losing team. That is just what our boys have had to do so far this year, and it is to their credit that they stuck it out through a long, tough season without a single victory to enlighten their efforts.

Two football players well deserve to be mentioned here. They are Anthony "Hippo" Avilla and Pete Lauzon. Both played remarkable ball this year. "Hipp" led the squad as captain, and his efforts to bring the team out on top did not go unnoticed, for he was awarded the "Most Valuable Football Player" trophy at the end of the season. If ever an award was well deserved, it was that one.

Perhaps the most outstanding basketball players of the season were Elliot Macomber and David Cargill. (Officially, the "Most Valuable Basketball Player" had not been selected at the time this publication went to press). The two boys played spirited games. In my opinion Dave deserves special mention for his intestinal fortitude. He went through more than one game with a very badly infected foot, and it was not until the coaches discovered the seriousness of his injury that he was barred from further participation.

As a closing tribute to this year's teams, the Class of '43 pays its respects to all those who played during both seasons, and last but not least the coaches. To next year's teams we wish all the success that they rightly deserve.

Girls' Sports

This year's hockey team at Fairhaven High School played two games with their traditional rival, Dartmouth. Coached by Miss Cushing, our first game was a tie and our record ended in a victory for Fairhaven. After the game light refreshments were served in the cafeteria.

First row—Betty Kobak, Anne Lawton, Lois Swift, captain, Dorothy Viera, Hilda Botelho.
Second row—Pauline Duval, Janice Braley, Miss Cushing, instructor, Eunice Rogers, Priscilla Furtado.

Third row—Claire Santos, Betty Lewis, Gloria Serpa, and Barbara Silver.

In previous years the basketball teams at Fairhaven High School have always played outside games with other schools. This year because of the war these schedules have been cancelled, but we have continued our intramural class games.

Included in the girls' activities are ping-pong, swimming, bowling, badminton, and soft ball.

The Class of 1944

In September the junior class elected officers. The results of the ballots were as follows: president, Robert Mahoney; vice-president, Louis Boroski; secretary, Ruth Besse; and treasurer, Ruth Fitzgerald; executive committee, Victor Sylvia, Augustine Perry, Stephen Gonet, and Everett Downing.

During the fall, some of the junior girls sold candy at the football games in order to earn money for the class.

In December, the juniors held a White Christmas Dance at which everyone had a good time, due in part to the attractive decorative scheme. Thanks, Skipper!

About this time, a signal honor came to the class of 1944 in the award of the Fairhaven "A" Banner, given each term to the class outstanding in good behavior, good attendance, service, and academic achievement.

In February, the juniors were represented by several members in the operetta, Shreds and Patches.

Our March calendar scheduled a spring dance. The decorations which pictured Bambi and his little forest friends were most unusual, and occasioned much favorable comment. This dance was for the entire school. In March, also, the Honor Society Initiation was held in the old auditorium. This year fourteen juniors were initiated.

At the end of May, the class of '44 held the long waited Junior Prom, which was a very gala affair, in the South American manner.

Junior day, following the traditional pattern, was held in June. At this assembly, the class of '44 marched in and took the seniors' chairs. The juniors had the usual advice given to them by the experienced seniors, and the former gave the seniors some worthy counsel, also. That night the Junior Day Dance was held in the gym. Needless to say, it was a great success!

The Class of 1945

The sophomores opened their school year by voting for class officers. The following were chosen: Robert Barnicle, president; Judith Barstow, vice-president; Janice Braley, secretary; and Priscilla Gurney, treasurer. Miriam Jason, Donald Dumont, Faith Lincoln, Jean Miller, Alberta Silver, William Wilson, Henrietta Dias, and Janet Carey were elected to serve on the executive committee.

In November a class dance, was held, which was a great success financially. Since this was the first school dance, it was the beginning of a new romance for many students. The music for the affair was provided by a record machine.

The patriotic sophomores did their share in buying war stamps this year. Room 11 led the school in the sale of stamps, as they bought on the average of fifteen dollars worth per week. The students did much to increase the sales, by writing poems urging the sophomores to help their country by purchasing stamps and bonds. Henry Fisher showed special ability in this line.

In April, the Class of 1945 sponsored a Flag Dance, with very artistic decorations. The flags of the United Nations were hung around the gym, and at one end of the dance floor a drawing by Gloria Serpa of the Statue of Liberty stood in the spotlight, making a striking novelty.

The sophomores contributed to school sports this year, as several of the boys went out for football, baseball, and basketball.

As The Huttlestonian comes off the press, the sophomores are not only reviewing their successful year, but are looking forward to their junior year which they hope will be even more prosperous under the understanding guidance of Miss Giguere.

The Class of 1946

Alas, the lot of the poor freshmen! It is not to be envied, this lowest class, always shoved around and abused by the upper classes. The poor souls have few dances to brighten up their lives, and they spend a very quiet, aye, even dull, year at the bottom of the heap. Tradition has willed it, thus, and nobody seems willing to go against tradition.

An afternoon dance was held March 12 under the sponsorship of this class and the eighth graders, admission to which was one War Stamp of any denomination. General chairman of the affair was Edward Harrington of the freshmen class. This was the only occasion the Freshmen and Eighth Graders worked together on a social gathering, but it was for a worthy cause.

Work in the interest of War Stamp sales has been carried on throughout the year by two members of the freshman class, Edward Harrington, and Joseph Gonsalves, under the direction of Miss Alice White, freshman home room teacher. The fact that our school now flies, or should fly, the United States Treasury's Minute Man flag, is due in no small part to the work of these three in selling War Stamps and Bonds to the students in the Addition home rooms.

March 23 marked an important date in history! On that day, at an assembly for the freshmen, an announcement by Mr. Parkinson was made public — that manual training is now open to girls as well as boys! The innovation has been tried in many schools to date, but the results here remain to be seen, and the best remains to be hoped for. Boys are admittedly more proficient in the use of tools than are girls, but members of the feminine sex are reported (by an unusually unreliable source) to use fewer adjectives when performing the well-known trick of missing the tack with a good heavy hammer.

At this writing, the only evening event permitted the freshmen is a dance scheduled for the latter part of May.

The class advisor for the year was Miss Peters. Class officers were president, Omar Renaud; vice-president, Phyllis Hamer; secretary, Anna March; treasurer, George Snedden. The executive committee consisted of Earl Serpa and Beryl Raybold.

Yes, a quiet year. "But," say the freshmen, "wait until next year!" This warning is not to be taken lightly.

Fairhaven High School

The Class of 1947

In years to come, when any member of the Class of 1947 has occasion to glance back over the record of the class in its eighth grade year, his heart will swell with pride at the many accomplishments and achievements which make this class notable. Particularly deserving of mention is the splendid work in connection with the Junior Red Cross and the well-known Fairhaven Junior Improvement Association. This year found the two organizations, both devoted to civic service, merging under the direction of Miss Edith P. Bixby. A full list of the activities undertaken under this sponsorship would fill many pages, and unfortunately, we have but one. However, a partial list is in order and should include a record of 100% enrollment in the Junior Red Cross early in the year. In early October, an assembly was held commemorating the 25th anniversary of the Red Cross, and the class was warmly congratulated on its achievement. But this was only the beginning. Eighth graders took a very active part in the salvage drive at that time which netted over $40.00. All very well for the school, which felt proud enough, but not enough for the eighth grade. These, the youngest of all, formed into five groups, for the purpose of making a permanent salvage drive a success. The five groups worked during study periods, and periods allotted to Red Cross work, collecting tin cans from their fellow students, the High School cafeteria, and the Tabitha Inn. Not only did they collect the cans, but cleaned and flattened them as well.

Pupils from this class worked with pupils from other schools, just before Christmas time, packing boxes for the Camp Edwards' hospital. The results were amazing — a total of 1600 boxes were sent off! Among other contributions to the Red Cross were 1 carriage robe; 12 scrap books; 50 Christmas cards; 21 menu covers, and 7 tray covers. Still later, the eighth grade Junior Red Cross collaborated with our Student Council in pushing the Victory Book Drive over the top, with 115 books, 45 puzzles, 15 magazines, and 11 phonograph records.

The class advisor was Miss Rose Caton, and the class officers were as follows: president, Robert Viera; vice president, Claire Gwozdz; secretary, Beatrice Mello; treasurer, Phyllis Gurney.

As is customary for the eighth grade class, an afternoon dance was held in late October, and an evening dance is scheduled for graduation.

Law or Luck?

A man I used to know liked to tell the story of an impatient lad who declared that bad luck dogged his footsteps. "There is no system or law in the world," the boy would say. "Everything is controlled by luck." One day as he spoke those words, he was caught up in a whirling cloud and was carried to a place he had never seen before. And truly it was a strange country. The first man the boy saw had one eye in the middle of his forehead, while the next had a row of three eyes on his right cheek. Beside the road was a patch of potatoes whose plants were as tall as corn, while nearby corn was ready to pick with ears no bigger than a man's finger. The astonished youth approached a group of people standing in a barnyard and as he drew near he could see that they were gravely regarding an animal that was the size of a horse but it had the head of a pig and the horns of a cow.

"Excuse me, sir," said the boy, "but will you tell me the name of this country?"

One of the men looked at him soberly and replied, "This is the Land of Luck."

"I find things very strange here," said the boy.

"So do we," answered the man. "In this country everything happens according to chance. We may plant beans and get a crop of oak trees. We may have daylight for a week or darkness for a month. Children do not resemble their parents and beasts like this one appear frequently. I wish we were back in the world of law where I used to live."

This fantastic tale serves to remind us all that we still live in a world of law and order; not in a world of luck and chance. Many of the laws that govern our world are well known, but there are others yet to be discovered. Sometimes we make mistakes because we do not know any better. At other times we know the laws involved, but we just do not feel like observing them. In either case, the laws remain in effect.

You will recall an inspiring assembly speaker who said "What you are to be, you are now becoming." This was one way of stating the law of cause and effect. It means that if you plant industry you will not reap indolence, or if you plant knowledge you will not reap ignorance. You can be sure that for everything that happens there is a cause.

Growth is an evidence of life. Millions of Victory gardeners will judge the value and vitality of their plants this summer by the test of growth. In our early years, we make remarkable progress in physical growth. Then, fortunately for our convenience, we stop growing in size. We say we have got our growth. But the mind, which began to grow when our body did, may continue to develop. We live in a fascinating world, but its beauty and ugliness, its present condition and its future possibilities are revealed not to stagnant, but to growing minds. As you leave school determine to develop your mind. To live you must grow.

In a world full of war, turmoil, and distress, it may be hard to see a reign of law and order. Perhaps the law of respect has been neglected. Respect in its highest form is seen in reverence for God. Respect for authority is expected of every citizen. Toward parents we feel a mixture of respect and affection. But what is our attitude toward those who speak a different language or who follow different customs? The law of respect demands that we treat human beings as human beings wherever we find them. More often than not, we shall find the differences between us and others are superficial. There are people who choose to do what is harmful to their fellow men. These have to be restrained at whatever cost. But, by and large, people are essentially alike, and mutual respect will go far toward preserving the just and lasting peace for which we are willing to spend blood, sweat, and tears during the years of war.

We all love our country. Some must take up arms in defense of our heritage of freedom. All of us must read and study and think to understand the nature of our problems and to recognize good solutions when we see them. America has no patience with the theory of a master-race. We do not want to dominate the world, nor do we want anyone else to. We want to grow in ability to solve our own problems and to respect and cooperate with fellow human beings who live in other lands.

Your high school courses have given you a foundation of knowledge and some practice in solving problems. Enlarge and strengthen this foundation and erect on it by self-disciplined thought and action a character worthy of the name American.

Chester M. Downing.

returning home without wearing some protection against the weather, which was really quite chilly. As for the homework which they had also brought, — alas!

The tragic scene took a turn for the better upon the appearance of the Coach, who was kind enough to unlock the locker room door for them.

When John Atkinson reached Washington Street on his way home from the Senior Play, he suddenly realized he had forgotten his suitcase. Mr. Atkinson sighed, took a forlorn look at the gasoline gauge, and turned his car back in the direction of our High School. Reaching the school, John spent long minutes finding the right key for the right door, but finally gained admittance to the Addition. Everything inside was as black as ink, and John soon lost his way. By feeling against the wall, and brushing against the row of lockers, he stumbled along in the general direction of the auditorium. Suddenly, the line of lockers stopped! Our hero also halted and very cautiously put out his hand to investigate the situation. However, he lost his balance and fell flat on his face, denting the floor considerably. Upon regaining his senses, John realized that the auditorium door had been open and he had fallen right into the hall. Pardon us — he had not fallen into the hall; instead, he had landed squarely upon his long lost suitcase.

Of course everyone has heard about Mr. Entin's "Rip Van Winkle Club." This splendid institution has been organized expressly for the benefit of those poor souls who come to Biology Class lacking their quota of sleep, or lacking the proper preparation for the day's work, or, more unfortunately, both. For those who may be interested, meetings are held in Room Six after school. For the further information of those who are interested, the "meetings" are in reality those quaint gatherings known to most students as "aftersessions".

Soon after the successful presentation of the Senior Play, Hilda Bothelo and John Atkinson were found arguing over some trivial matter. The "trivial matter" had its beginning when Evelyn Texeira stated that the aforementioned two should be voted "first to get married" among the 1943 class superlatives. Hilda climaxed the situation by bellowing, to one and all alike, "Heaven forbid!"

It is a well known fact that, when reciting in class, Rose Rapoza is very, very bashful. (This cannot be said of Rose when she is among her friends or is outside of class!) The following scene, which takes place whenever Rose is asked to recite, will qualify the foregoing statement. As Rose gets up to recite, she is apt to catch the eye of one of her chums. Here lies the cause of the trouble! This is the beginning of the end. At this moment a little snicker escapes her. She glances at the teacher, whose stern gaze conveys the general idea that it is time to commence the recitation — but quickly! She tries to speak, but no words come from her mouth. Then, as a deep red color, starting from her shoes, rises above her ears, she finds herself able to talk. As her report progresses, her color changes to a deeper hue, and then — it's all over! Exhausted by the ordeal, the bashful senior resumes her seat and returns to normal. Thank Heaven it doesn't happen more often.
